

We triggered this avalanche of wind-drifted snow as we approached very carefully from a low angle slope above, on 1/30/2020. This is near Lulu Pass outside Cooke City on a south facing slope at 10,000'. It broke within recently drifted snow, but these slabs could be enough weight to break deeper and wider on sugary layers deep in the snowpack. Photo: GNFAAC

Advisory Region
Cooke City
Longitude

-109.96W

Latitude

45.07N

Avalanche Details: Human triggered wind slab on Lulu
Cooke City, 2020-01-30