

On a cold day we rode to Frazier Basin and quickly answered the question, “Are wind slab avalanches still possible or have they stabilized?” We saw a natural avalanche (R2, D1.5) that released on a steep headwall just to the south (I believe I’ve heard this referred to as October Bowl). Photo: GNFAC

Advisory Region
Bridger Range
Longitude
-110.98W

Latitude

45.92N

Avalanche Details: Fresh Wind Slab Avalanche

Bridger Range, 2025-02-13